Values at Home and in Partnerships

The following is an incomplete menu of proactive ways to promote core higher education values. What other ways can you suggest?

1	Create and disseminate a statement of values and processes for individual programs or institution-wide.
2	Make values statements and processes transparent by sharing via websites, email bulletins, and letters.
3	Incorporate discussion of values into leadership, staff, and student induction processes and offer annual/regular "refreshers" as part of professional development programs.
4	Circulate an annual values assessment letter or report and create opportunities to discuss with stakeholders.
5	Organize an annual lecture, workshop, essay contest, or prize on values themes.
6	Encourage values-positive practices regarding on-campus events and speakers, including disclosing sources of invitations (to distinguish official from unofficial events) and funding.
7	Encourage speakers at campus events to respect campus cultures/practices with regard to questions, discussion, and debate (e.g., by requiring equal time for speaker remarks and questions).
8	Encourage protesters at campus events to respect campus cultures/practices with regard to dissent and disruption.
9	Encourage diversity and demilitarization of campus security, as warranted, and training on security's role in safeguarding core values and campus discourse.
10	Encourage research and course offerings on values-related issues.
11	Appoint a values ombudsperson empowered to raise values issues proactively and in response to concerns.
12	Establish a values committee to encourage positive discussion of values issues and resolve disputes.
13	Establish a column, newsletter, website, or social media feed dedicated to regular airing of values concerns.
14	Encourage regular radio or TV discussions of values concerns.
